“Four things do not come back:
the spoken word, the sped arrow,
the past life, and the neglected opportunity.”

- Ted Chiang, Stories of Your Life and Others

Many scientists were skeptical that a bird could grasp abstract concepts. Humans like to think they're unique.

“El Gran Silencio” Ted Chiang

“The great silence is perhaps not a good example of this, given that it is full of direct and narrative statements, but reveals the most profound meaning. The peculiar problem of the Short Story Writer is how to do the action you describe reveals as much as possible of the mystery of possible existence. “Dese flanner or e a” e Connor said in A e a. “Writing short Stories. A. a. The work of the fiction writer, from this point of view, is not to answer the questions, but to surround them with the reality of characters and details and plot, approaching a truth that can not be touched directly. I love A e a. “The great silence e a. Because it is the strange bird out, or, to double and use another cliché, the canary in the literary coal mine of the collection that it warns us that we could all be answered if we do not listen. In the notes of history at the end of the book, we learn that the Pez Zo has been written to accompany a similar artistic exhibition & calzadilla, where video and audio of the telescope and forest are juxtaposed and subtitled with the text of Chiang. After the prose, the next key for how to explore Chiang's stories so effectively the ideas is that they were told or focused on the right person with the right episode on this, someone whose story arrives in the heart of the premise. It establishes the premise and introduces the characters: people use the Arecibo telescope to Puerto Rico to listen to other species that can communicate, despite the fact that there is one that can do it in the forest right outside. We will not just cry. Are you OK. Even when the narrator is an animal, Chiang collects the right animal. This concept to reveal mystery is the literary equivalent of the scientific method, in which every experiment has a hypothesis and test it and collectively all the experiments Community work together to demonstrate any resulting theory within a reasonable margin of doubt. Flock (Nottalalaxe, Koub The story I chose to write is the one told by a parrot. In the following four sections, the parrot explains the unique contact calls and compares them with the message sent with Arecibo, describes how parrots and humans are unique in their common ability to learn vocally, empathizes with the man in the inability to recognize the intelligence of humans. parrots since parrots thought humans were not bright for a long time, and finally it introduces the language “aspiration” means both hope and breath and that the words we utter are a sharing of our ideas and our life force. The collection continues the intellectual thought and emotional work of Chiang's previous collection, Arrival (nÁÁ©e Stories of Your Life and Others before the movie), in which the protagonist of the story of the title learns an alien language that reveals her inexorable sweet and sour future. It is an ultimate adventure outward and upward for anyone listening, and elevates the story to beauty. Although it was written with subtitles, it stands out on its own and shows how you can explore great ideas in fiction. In the first four sections, the parrot introduces the premise, then an answer, then another, then an example in the shape of Alex, an African grey who showed the man that parrots understand abstract concepts such as shape and color. The universe is supposed to be a cacophony of voices, but instead it is disconcertingly quiet. Or maybe the fact that we can't learn them is part of his point of view. “The Great Silence” is narrated in twelve short sections, each of which introduces a different mystery and tests another hypothesis. Explaining Fermi's paradox (which is the enigma that even though the universe is so old and big that man should have met aliens, aliens didn't), the parrot rep rep ataicsonoc eiceps anu id enoiznettaál erative rep alligunart agnamir etnegilltini ativ al ehc elovenogiar “Á ehc extinction. Maybe Chiang thought that any myth be presented could come across as cheesy, insignificant, or at least underwhelming. After these human beliefs, we learn that parrots have their own simple myths that are at risk of dying out with them. Chiang eÁÁAs prose, while often beautiful, is quiet, methodical, and patient, even though the stories have premises that sound flashy when summarized. But I and my fellow parrots are right here. It eÁÁAs like the summarizing of a case presented by an attorney in a movie, an epic oration rarely witnessed in the wilds of real life. This is the language of an author carefully and calmly elucidating an idea. Here eÁÁAs your idea, here eÁÁAs your narrator, and here is your setting, setting.
